In many fields of technology it is necessary to protect workpieces, or workpieces and tools during use, with various materials which maintain the workpiece or workpieces at a desired temperature or even which insulate the workpiece or workpieces or parts of a workpiece against high heat. Such materials may be referred to herein as heat insulating materials, or heat insulating coatings. Examples of such heat insulating materials can be found in the following application areas where heat insulation is required; mechanical engineering, automotive, electronics, metallurgy, architectural and construction, welding, manufacturing in general, and combustion engineering in particular. These coatings must satisfy high requirements, for example, good adhesion to the workpiece or workpieces, good heat resistance and good corrosion resistance. U.S. Pat. No. 4,328,428 discloses high temperature metal-ceramic coating compositions, a U.S. patent specification describing such an invention. The disclosed compositions are cured by heat and contain, as the metal component, Cu, Ag, W, Mo, Ni, Ti, Nb, Ta, V, Cr, Zr, Al, Ga, In, Sn, Hf, Y or Sn. This U.S. patent specification does not recognize the specific advantages of silicon carbide as the ceramic
