I am trying to skip the first row in my csv file. I can't use the head command since the column names contain a space. Also, I have tried to remove the headers using the read.csv(..., names = FALSE) function, but unfortunately it did not work. The problem is that I need to read in the first couple of rows from this csv and ignore them. The csv is used for a plotting script, and you can see a more in depth description of the problem here: Export to CSV (.csv) with space in the name A: I'm not 100% sure what exactly you mean, but if you mean remove the first row after you opened it, this should do the trick: h In the aviation industry, aircraft-related downtime due to mandatory inspection requirements is one of the leading causes of aircraft losses and is a growing industry problem. Wing stringers are positioned at the exterior of the wing which extends the length of the fuselage of the aircraft, providing structural support to the fuselage skin. The strain on the wing stringers increases as a function of wing loading which is the total weight of the aircraft divided by its cross-sectional area. For example, under certain flight conditions, a modern passenger aircraft loaded with 100 passengers can have a wing loading of as much as 46,000 lbs. per square foot. As a result, the strain placed on the wing stringers is very significant and may be responsible for cracks and/or rupture 09e8f5149f
